I would advise you to seek and gain wisdom [REDACTED] in whatever path we take in these next four years, and the rest of our lives.

For those entering university, I would advise that you may be guided and encouraged with industry, hard work, and to bear the fruit of the Spirit. But I would also tell you, that in your time at college, that you may remember right and wrong, what is good and bad, what is Godly and what is of this world, to flee the many temptations and to embrace to true joy of righteousness [REDACTED]

I would hope that you all may seek out and associate yourselves with people with your best in mind to help you in the years to come, friends, family, teachers, pastors, mentors, and others, that through their friendship and love that they may guide you with support, advice, and accountability, [REDACTED]

I would hope that you all would have the boldness to stand for what is right, truthful, and just, wherever you work, socialize, or study, even when you are challenged or cast out when you seek to do what is right.

I would hope that this class would have the wisdom with the means with which they are provided; to be wise with our monies, diligent with our time, and to know that the world of the generous gets larger and larger, that the one who blesses others is abundantly blessed. And in the times where we feel that we must endure every moment, let us not worry, [REDACTED]

And in all times, let us always be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, [REDACTED]

I would hope that you all would live out your lives with contentment and thanks for the blessings [REDACTED] hope for our future, and the greatest of these love and charity toward all.

Congratulations Class of 2014, Thank you.
